Cedar City Council follows up on 4th of July parade concerns

by Trinity PAJÓN IRON COUNTY TODAY

Last week, Cedar City Lions Club member Beth Stephenson presented her concerns to the Cedar City Council about the July 4th Parade safety and expressed the need for a facility for float creation.

Although concerns of crowd control have also been discussed, Stephenson didn’t feel Lions Club members could resolve the issue. She continued to discuss her hesitancy to plan for next year’s July 4th Parade without knowing if the Lions Club will have a facility to create and store the floats. She then asked if the City would partner with the Lions Club to resolve these issues.

City Manager Paul Bittmenn stated that the facility which the Lions Club used this year is also used for Parks and Recreation and Public Works. Currently, Public Works is developing an expansion for the shop building. After the expansion is completed, there will be a few days open which will allow room for vehicles.

Despite this, Bittmenn stated that there are neighboring landowners who have approached the city to obtain a lease to mine gravel. Bittmenn remarked that in his opinion the facility is a better gravel resource than a storage facility.

The Cedar City Council discussed a resolution to designate the Leigh Hill water tank as a representation of the recently retired Cedar High School Redmen mascot again during last week’s meeting.

The original resolution was proposed during the June 5 meeting by Councilman Paul Cozzens. After discussion amongst council members and public comments, the resolution was ultimately tabled for further consideration at the June 12 meeting.

Additions to the original resolution from the previous discussion were outlined as the following: the change of the word monument to the word marker; annual examination of the tank; the special interest group will be responsible for maintenance and upkeep on the water tank; the tank will be completely repainted and updated every 10 years; the city retains ownership and complete control over the water tank; the effect of the resolution will expire should City Council vote to allow the water tank to be used for a different purpose.

City Attorney Tyler Romeril explained additional changes, which were asked for by Councilwoman Terri Hartley.

“Essentially what the resolution says is the Leigh Hill tank is going to be designated for Cedar High School, the North water tank is to be designated to the Canyon View High School; the funds to keep those tanks kept up are to be donated, not to come from tax payers; and that the respective high schools would be in charge of the tanks,” Romeril explained.

He added that the high schools would be responsible for the aesthetics of the tanks and would need to come before City Council before changing any designs.

Cozzens brought up the suggestion of using additional water towers for Cedar High’s new mascot as well.

Councilman Craig Isom said he reached out to the Cedar Band of Paiutes to ask for input and read the feedback he received.

“It was just interesting to see their perspective and I think it’s of great value,” Isom said. “They’re impacted by all of this discussion. It said: ‘most of the people polled seemed to think the water tank should be changed to match the new mascot. A large number seemed to feel that no matter what they said it would be ignored anyway.’”

Councilman Ron Adams expressed his concern of the issue being used to pin two governing bodies against one another.

“I didn’t know this was actually a part of it until it was expressed to me that they wanted the City Council on board with something that the groups could take and use against the school district,” Adams said. “I don’t want that to happen. I don’t want this decision that’s going to be made to pin (City Council) against the Iron County School District. That is not the intent. In fact, we really shouldn’t even be discussing the issue as I mentioned. We didn’t make the decision to change the mascot -- that was the school district -- and it got emptied into the city’s lap to try and gain that support and I will not support that aspect of it at all.”

Adams said after listening during previous discussions he agrees that taking a step back as a community to gain a broader perspective would be productive for this issue.

“This is how decisions are made: with a compromise (if we want to use that word),” he continued. “Is everybody always happy? No. But the two different ideas or parties can come to the party and each has to give and take some to come up with something that will maybe be healthy for everybody.”

Councilman Scott Phillips indicated concern that the students of Cedar High School were not involved in the discussion.

“My greatest concern is leaving the students out of this conversation,” he said. “The alumni have been involved in it and community leaders, but the students have had very little to say. And I worry about your children and grandchildren... in five years they’re going to be in Cedar High School and what are they going to have to look forward to?”

Phillips also said there may be an issue in the future of all schools in the area wanting mascots on water tanks.

One small step

Last Sunday marked the 50th anniversary of putting a man on the moon. It proved the impossible was possible and it gave our planet hope for the future. Even with all the conspiracies floating around, including the growing number of people who are certain that the Earth is flat, landing a man on the moon is an inspiring story that still brings tears to the eyes and more meaningful looks into the skies.

When we think of that first moon landing we usually remember the famous “...one small step” quote from Armstrong—who also saved that lunar mission by manually landing their spacecraft after the computer overshot their landing zone. However, there were many people beyond that first step who made such an incredible event come to pass. Closer to our earthly homes and hearts, great journeys and accomplishments most often begin with one small step, or one small idea. Hopefully, we also have many people to support our journey along the way, from blueprints to blastoff.

Whatever your small step, or small idea are, keep taking them and keep believing in yourself—even if you’re the only one right now. Who knows, 50 years from now we could be celebrating something great that you did today. It’s worth a shot.

The opinions stated in this article are solely those of the author and not of Iron County Today.

A newspaper obituary last week contained the following: "He worked full-time until he was 83 years of age." Not knowing the deceased, I can only surmise that he loved his work. I also guess that many of his friends thought he was crazy.

I can relate to the retirement question. I'm asked weekly if I'm still working full-time and when I plan to replace the time clock for the hammock. Many readers have been asked the same question and many also have replied with the same ambiguous answer I offer: "I'm not sure. As long as I enjoy my job and my health holds up, I'll continue showing up."

A friend of mine takes a different view. Since his father retired on a company pension in his mid-50s, he had always planned on doing similarly. He is now pushing past 60, is still working and is annoyed that finances may keep him working several more years.

When should a person retire? There is obviously no pat answer, but health and finances play a predominant role in the consideration.

Few private companies today have healthy pension funds, and many have eliminated them totally. Of workers invested in common multi-employer pension funds, some 1.3 million workers (12% of investments) are in funds expected to run out of money. Yes, the Federal Government has a pension guarantee unit, but when pension plans fail, the government normally pays out only one-fifth of the expected pension. At the same time, many older Americans are still paying off student loans. Surprisingly, of the $1.5 trillion in student loan debt, about 20% ($290 billion) is owed by people over the age of 50, a five-fold increase in the past 15 years. And we’re not talking small change either. The average student loan debt of those older Americans is more than $33,000.

The solution to the finance quandary is simple, but not always followed. For instance, 25% of employees at companies offering 401(k) retirement plans don’t take advantage of the full company match. The loss to the average employee is $1,336 each year. Combine that with overspending and it’s easy to see why such a high percentage of men and women 55 years of age and over cannot come up with $5,000 in an emergency.

Putting off retirement is the sole solution for those who haven’t planned or have been hit hard by an unforeseen expense. Not only do you have an income, but your Social Security benefit would also grow 8% annually for each year you put off claiming it. If an employee worked an additional five years beyond normal retirement age, his or her lifetime Social Security benefit could increase by some $50,000. Even if the worker did claim a full SSA benefit at age 67, his monthly check would increase each year due to his continued income.

Retirement is a personal choice. I cannot imagine a roofer, for instance, working at an advanced age. (An associate, a successful plumber, told me last week he would love to continue working, but "the job is too hard on his body") Another factor, of course, is what a person plans to do during his or her retirement years.

My personal experience has been that women have an easier time than men adjusting and “filling” their day with meaningful activities. Too many men sit around and mope instead of pursuing a volunteer activity or finding a hobby.

Or one can put off retirement by refusing to worry about his or her age. Artist Pablo Picasso said in his later years, "Age only matters when one is aging. Now that I have arrived at a great age, I might as well be 20!"

Consider changing Constitution to reallocate income taxes

I recently attended the Tax Restructuring and Equalization Task Force meeting held in St. George. The power point graphs they use to sell this tax restructuring plan is very misleading. The state contends that sales taxes are declining in the state. This is simply not true according to comprehensive annual financial report which is on the state auditor’s website.

Many thanks to Neil Walter for compiling the data and for the spreadsheet, graph and some talking points.

Sales tax has increased approx. 1.5 Billion in 23 years and continues to increase an average of 4.2% per year every year, or a 149% increase over 23 years.

State revenue in 1995 was approx. 4.5 Billion
State revenue in 2018 was approx. 13.5 Billion
An increase of 9 Billion
State spending in 1995 was approx. 4 Billion
State spending in 2018 was approx. 13.5 Billion
An increase of 9 Billion
Population and inflation have increased by 162% since 1995 while revenue has increased by 208% and spending has increased by 235%

Utah government clearly has a spending problem. We need to cut spending before we do anything. This is just a few expenditures this year.

$500k for “2019 United Nations Civil Society Conference”
$250k for “Better Days 2020 First to Vote Campaign”
$200k for “Get Healthy Utah”
$500k for the Sundance Film Festival
$200k for “Utah Semi-Annual Multi-Genre Pop Culture Expo”
$6 million for the Utah Sports Commission
$200k for the Hill Air Force Base Air Show
$100k for the Freedom Festival
$2 million for “Arts Sustainability” grants
$250k for Ballet West
$150k for Center Point Legacy Theatre
$150k for the Hale Center Theater
$350k for the Tuacahn Center
$250k for the Utah Sports Hall of Fame
$350k for the Utah Symphony
$500k for the Zion National Park 100th Anniversary Celebration
$400k for security for the National Governor’s Association Meeting
$1.3 million for a 4-H Initiative
$300k for an Olympic-Caliber Skateboard Park
$500k for “Air Quality Messaging Campaigns”

"Broadening the base and lowering the rate" is just another way of saying that these reforms are for those who want the government to do more and more at the expense of the Utah taxpayer.

The spin is that sales tax revenues are "shrinking" and "declining". The fact is that sales tax revenues are increasing. According to the Utah State Tax Commission sales tax collections were up 3.7% in 2016, 4.4% in 2017 and 9% in 2018 (up $220 million in 2018). And it won’t be until this year when the full effect of new revenue from the Wayfair decision (tax on internet sales) is realized for even bigger gains.

Having operated a small manufacturing business in the construction industry for over 32 years I feel that taxing all services is basically a value added tax that will add at least 5% to the already high cost of a home, it also adds a tremendous burden to business which makes it far from revenue neutral.

It will grow the size of government tremendously by adding staff to process returns from all the new tax collectors in the State of Utah.

Utahns should say no to this so-called “modernization and revenue restructuring.” Simply put, it’s an unneeded move that will do significant damage to the state’s economy. It will also result in economic benefits for our neighbors just over the border in Mesquite, Nevada, Evanston, Wyoming, and Preston, Idaho. It will be easy for some businesses to relocate there and capitalize on this legislation if reconsidered. Simply put,

1. Sales tax is not falling. It is growing at a similar rate as the population growth plus inflation.
2. Overall revenue is growing much faster than population growth plus inflation.
3. Overall spending is growing faster than revenue.
4. Sales tax is a tax on consumption, not income or investment. Inflation measures the change in consumption of goods and services purchased by consumers (not businesses and not investment). We should index sales tax to inflation, rather than GDP (gross domestic product is consumption + investment + government spending + net exports).
5. We should NOT lower income taxes and raise sales tax. It is a loss of transparency and accountability in the way the state collects and assesses taxes.

We amended the constitution to allow Higher Ed to be funded from the Education Fund 20 years ago. We can do it again. Removing the legislatures handcuffs is a better way to address the revenue silo problem than restructuring the sales tax. It is also less threatening to public education relative to cutting income tax and by extension, the revenue in the education fund.

We need to consider changing the Constitution to allow income taxes to be reallocated.

Thanks,
Paul Cozzens
Iron County Commissioner

Annual Farm Field Day outlines water research

by Kelsey KEENER
IRON COUNTY TODAY

Representatives from several agencies involved in water conservation attended the second Farm Field Day to share information about research focusing on water optimization for agricultural use.

The event took place at Hunter Land and Livestock, where Brent Hunter welcomed guests along with representatives from various agencies and universities.

Agroclimate Extension Specialist Matt Yost.

Utah State University Extension, Southern Utah University, the Central Iron County Water Conservancy District, the E and I Conservation District and several Utah producers are working together to look into ways to conserve and optimize agricultural water usage following a grant for $220,000 so the CICWCD can incentivize farmers and ranchers to use Low Elevation Sprinkler Application.

Last year’s field day focused on introducing the new water application technologies available to producers: LESA, Low Energy Precision Application, Mid Elevation Sprinkler Application and Mobile Drip Irrigation. This year, researchers shared the information that was gathered during last year’s studies.

CICWCD Public Outreach Coordinator Jessica Staheli provided an update on the district’s progress using the grant to convert irrigation pivots to LEPA. Approximately 16 pivots have been converted as of May and there are eight others in the process of being converted.

E and I Conservation District representative Tyce Palmer went into more detail on the conversion project. Although the total cost of converting an average seven-power pivot to LEPA is $18,000, through the grant funds and incentives from Rocky Mountain Power, the average cost to a producer of converting is approximately $5,300. There are approximately 1,673 acres currently under LEPA use in the area and the district has received grants to continue conversion efforts in the Parowan Valley as well as or aquifer recharge.

“We’re making some pretty good progress in the county,” Palmer said. “It’s nice to have partners like the CICWCD and Extension, National Resources Conservation Service and the producers that we have.”

Yost discussed agricultural water optimization and introduced irrigation research and early results on corn fields.

“If you think about optimizing water in agriculture, there are a lot of options,” he said. “It can get really complex fast, and there’s lots of things we can do. One of those things is how we apply the water, and we’re testing that on a lot of farms, but that is just one piece of optimizing water in 30 percent and not hurt our yields,” he said.

Yost also explained that as water application is only one piece to optimizing usage, there is also testing being done with stacking conservation practices determining what combinations of practices are ideal.

Extension Irrigation Specialist Neil Allen summarized irrigation research done to evaluate LEPA. Allen’s observations were that it’s important to fix problems early as well as to increase uniformity across fields in order to get the most out of LEPA irrigation.

Holt and Yost also discussed their trials with LEPA and MDI combined with the use of adding biochar to the soil. Biochar is thought to aid in conserving water by helping maintain soil moisture. Biochar was added to the research being done to improve and help manage irrigation. Winward briefly explained the watermark monitors being used to measure soil moisture at various depths. There are 25 monitors set up throughout southern Utah to gather soil moisture data based on current irrigation practices for different crop types and soil types. He provided his observations on the data that has been collected thus far.

“I think the idea is not to keep that surface full all the time, but maybe dry that surface down a little bit,” he explained. “I think you’ll get some weed control if you can do that. And what that means is you’re probably going to irrigate less often with more water (instead of) more often with less water. I think putting it on that way is going to be a more efficient, more effective way of utilizing that and I think drying that surface out a little bit is not bad for weed control and maybe when you cut it’ll help you hay dry down a little faster.”

USU Graduate Student Kyle Egbert reported findings on research regarding irrigation strategies to conserve water. Irrigation maintenance and scheduling were studied...
Stewart amendment to save retired war dogs passes the House

by Madison SHUPE
FOR IRON COUNTY TODAY

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Congressman Chris Stewart’s (UT-02) amendment in the first appropriations package, which allocates $200,000 to save retired war dogs, passes the House.

Currently, if a military dog retires from service in a non-combat zone overseas, it is up to the handler who wishes to adopt him to pay for the dog’s ride home. However, hundreds of dogs who are not adopted are abandoned in foreign countries, or worse—put down. This amendment ensures that military working dogs are returned to the United States upon completion of their service.

“These incredible military dogs have faithfully served our country and are each credited for saving hundreds of U.S. Military lives. It is up to us to make sure they return safely home.” – Rep. Chris Stewart

More about the War Dogs Amendment:
Stewart’s $200,000 amendment to Division C of H.R. 2740 is expected to save 200 war dogs this year. Funds will be made available later this year, when the bill is signed into law by President Trump. This amendment is supported by Mission K9 Rescue.

CONGRESSMAN CHRIS STEWART POSES with retired war dogs and supporters of the amendment to return military dogs to the United States after they’ve completed their honorable service.

FARM FIELD DAY

Together in order to research stacking conservation practices, Egbert studied combinations of three irrigation rates and equipment treatments on 12 farms in central Utah. His goal is to add four irrigation schedules to the research for further study.

“We couldn’t find any significant difference between this older equipment that’s putting out more water and new equipment that we put on and the equipment with a 10 percent reduction (in application rate),” Egbert explained. “For us, that means that A – we are probably wasting water too much, but B – we can save water. By stacking these methods we can correct our additions of overwatering we can water according to the crop and what it needs, we can implement these best management practices so that we’re saving ourselves money, we’re not wasting water or losing it and so that we can be good stewards of the environment.”

Yost added that these results come from only one cutting of hay.

“It is kind of early, this is just the first cut,” he said. “We do expect to start seeing pretty good differences between these treatments. We don’t think on a lot of these pivots it’s going to make a difference to have brand new equipment putting out the rate that it was intended to put.”

Women of Will will also present a scene from Pericles during the Cedar City July Social. Music will be performed by Jake Parkinson. Art Works Gallery to feature Utah sculptor Jack Seibold

by Linda Kiley

Utah sculptor, Jack Seibold, will be featured in a solo show at Art Works Gallery in Cedar City, Utah. 16 N 100 W, Cedar City, UT. The opening reception takes place on Friday, July 26, 2019, from 5–8pm. The exhibit, entitled “Metal, etc. etc. etc.”, will feature a selection of work constructed from reclaimed metal and burnished steel. These intriguing works of art will be on display through August 24, 2019.

Jack Seibold discovered his love for creating sculptures out of metal as a college student. With a welding torch as his primary tool, he combines high heat with pounding, bending, melting, cutting, and grinding in order to get just the right look. Using old scrap metal, he repurposes it into works of simple elegance; sometimes employing the use of wood and rock as alternative mediums. His pieces are existential in nature as he allows them to go wherever they lead him. He draws inspiration anywhere from the compositional elements of a photograph to a pile of paper; sometimes sketching out his ideas and other times allowing the piece to take whatever identity it emerges into. As he repurposes the metal, he puts a lot of himself into his work, making his pieces very personal and honest. Jack’s work is unique in that it tells a story using material that already has a story of its own.

About Art Works Gallery

Art Works Gallery is a fine art and fine craft gallery located in Cedar City, Utah. The gallery represents local, regional and national artists, who create in a wide variety of mediums and styles. Farmers Markets I've known & loved by Mary Anne Andersen

The farmers market fills an entire large city block in Salt Lake City. I don’t know how many vendors there are but it would be easily well over a hundred. It runs Saturday mornings for maybe 3 1/2 months and I love to go there. It offers fruit, vegetables, nuts, cheeses, bread and pastries, meat, beverages, and prepared foods; as well as hand-crafted items and art work. If I lived there, I would go every week and buy all my fresh produce and bread there, and eat my breakfast and purchase something for lunch as well. I am amazed when my many friends there don’t do the same. (Parking is a nightmare, though, which could have something to do with it.)

Over the years, I have gone alone when necessary, but the most fun times were when I took someone with me. When my grandchildren were young, they went with me willingly. I gave each of them a certain amount of cash and told them they could buy whatever they wanted, but they had to drop a dollar in the open cases of musicians playing live along the walk ways. They loved the adventure of this and loved seeing the dogs that were on leashes in large numbers. The only rule was only one sample per person per vendor, a rule particularly hard to follow at the Kettle Korn booths.

Years earlier in Fresno, the market at the intersection of the two largest streets was not as large but it was open year-round. Not only, as the saying goes, did the great Central Valley feed the world, but it fed our family every week. No family outings there, in that pre-grandchildren era; it was just part of my weekly shopping but better than the grocery store. It was a certified market, meaning the vendors could sell only that which they grew themselves, and so it was where I learned to eat seasonally. Our menus were determined by what was in season, starting in January with oranges and root vegetables, through spring greens, summer fruit and vegetables, fall grapes, and back to root vegetables. The mushroom man cried when I told him we were moving. I miss it as the only lamentable loss of leaving the Golden State.

The good news is, we have a market here, available Saturday mornings and Wednesday afternoons. It does not cover a city block and has maybe 6 to 8 vendors but I love to go and am recognized as a regular. The amount of work required is the amazing factor to me; home-made breads and pastries, prepared breakfast or lunch dishes, canned jams and preserves, dried herbs, and boxes of locally-grown produce must be prepared, transported, set up, sold, cleaned up, and then what’s left disposed of at home. Children often work the registers.

If this is a surprise to you, please go on Saturday. It is behind the IG Winery on Center Street and is Utah summer at its best!

Terri Hartley

I’m Terri Hartley, a current city councilwoman seeking reelection. I love Cedar City with all my heart. I was born and raised here, and after graduating Cedar High, I attended SUU, studying accounting. I was then hired at First Security Bank, eventually Wells Fargo, and I’ve been with them 42 years now. From my career I bring extensive, proven experience and leadership to the City Council, including wise management of financial resources, thorough understanding of government accounting, in-depth financial analysis, critical negotiation skills and transparent, proactive communication.

While serving on the Council, I’m proud of the many things I’ve worked to accomplish: city employees & administration wages now up to market standard for similar-sized communities; bringing higher-paying jobs to Cedar City; planning for water for the next 50 years; making significant improvements to the airport including upgrading ramps and securing funding to replace runways; building a gym/rec center and providing a permanent home for the ice rink, and working on a potential soccer complex in Fiddler’s Canyon; trail systems expanded; improvements at the golf course; an animal adoption center and Bicentennial Park improvements. The future of Cedar continues to get brighter, and it’s an exciting time to be an integral part in the strengthening of our cherished city. As your elected leader I have always carefully studied every issue, to make decisions based on what is best for our citizens and taxpayers, and will continue to if re-elected. I ask for your support! Thank you!

Brittanie Parry

Growing up, I was always proud to be from Cedar City, proud that my family’s hands helped build Cedar. That is why I felt compelled to run for City Council. I couldn’t continue to watch everything great about Cedar City be torn down and destroyed. Not just the historic neighborhoods but the way we value our neighbors. We all feel the pain when we lose another house or set of homes to a thoughtless and greedy developer.

We all know growth is important and a thriving city must grow. Like most citizens, my concern is the greed and short-sightedness that is coming with our growth and development. Cedar City needs to ask itself what kind of city does it want to be? A city that values the quality of life of every citizen and makes the people its top priority. Or, a hot mess of a wannabe urban city.

Cedar City needs people on its council that will champion for affordable housing, jobs that pay livable wages and demand responsible zoning. We need to revitalize our downtown and parks and start addressing the positive and negative impact that SUU has on our community. The city needs to start becoming proactive in its planning, not reactive.

The way we can achieve this is by splitting Cedar City into five sections, with a councilmember being responsible for each section. I guarantee the well-being and quality of life of every citizen will be at the forefront of every vote and decision I make.

TJ Penrod

When I began my education at SUU in 2002, I quickly fell in love with the incredible community of Southern Utah, and I made it my permanent home after graduation.

I have been politically active throughout my life, and I believe that a high tide raises all ships. I will work tirelessly to raise the tide and improve your quality of life here in Cedar City. I ask for your vote and become part of the movement, I only ask, “How can I help you?”

Tyler Melling

I am an estate planning attorney, SUU graduate, and current chairman of the Cedar City Area Chamber of Commerce. I met my wife, Hannah, in the choir chamber at SUU and we have 3 young children. I also serve on several community boards including the Orchestra of Southern Utah, Red Acre Center, and the community advisory board of the water conservancy district.

As more people discover Cedar City and want to make it their home, we need visionaries in public office who can find ways to welcome those new faces while keeping our roots. Great leaders can listen and find common ground. I love this City and want to keep a bright future for our children.

If elected I will address:

Local Business: In our business-friendly culture, it is shocking how often our City impedes local business development through irregular code enforcement and lack of communication. The City needs to be a better community business partner for those who choose to invest in us by creating a level, predictable playing field.

Affordable Housing: As we continue to grow, Cedar City needs more flexibility in removing burdensome regulations that increase housing costs so our local children, grandchildren, and university graduates can afford to work and raise families in our wonderful community.

Infrastructure: One of a city’s main roles is in developing roads, utilities, and other infrastructure. Cedar City taxpayers are on the hook for infrastructure liabilities for decades after they are built. Smart planning is critical to ensure our infrastructure meets our needs and remains affordable for the life of the project.

Barry Short

As a long-time self-employed business owner, I’ve learned how to make every dollar go as far as it can. I’m not cheap – I believe in spending what it takes to do the job right. But I am frugal, getting the greatest possible value out of every cent that is spent.

I believe that is a useful skill which will serve Cedar well, one that has not always been present in our city council.

Limiting the amount taken from you in taxes is an obligation that I feel deeply. Every dollar of taxes is a dollar that comes out of someone’s pocket – a dollar that isn’t spent on your home, your family, your food, your needs. In every way that I possibly can, I will vote to leave those dollars in your pocket.

We have a wonderful City. We have great people, excellent restaurants, lovely parks, terrific hotels, fun and informative festivals, and much more. We need to continue to nurture all the things that make Cedar City a great place to live by being a welcoming community for entrepreneurship and innovation, allowing the imaginations of our citizens to define the way forward. It’s time to start talking to one another and working in collaboration to solve the challenges that face us, including water and housing costs.

Together, we can steer this community forward in cooperation. If I will honor you with a term on the city council, I promise you will be happy that you did.

Don Oswald

I’m Don Oswald, and I love living in Cedar City. This is my home. I’m married to Heidi Anderson, daughter of Haken and Elaine Anderson. After graduating college, I taught and coached at the high school. We have 5 children along with 9 grandchildren.

I’ve been the mayor at 14 towns; I also am a board member of the Utah High Schools Officials Association, where we sell our local High Schools in Southern Utah.

I’m running for City Council because there are some things that I feel need to be addressed and I think I’m the only person who can do so.

1) I want to bring dignity to our neighborhoods by enforcing zoning and property use.
2) I want to bring higher paid jobs to Cedar City; families can stay here and purchase a home.
3) I want to work to develop our short term and long term vision.
4) I want to encourage real growth and development near their home, even when it’s also the cost of houses here – they’re increasing significantly in the past few years and are in need of repair; a lot of streets are in need of repair. I think that we need to do something there to help restore the infrastructure.

Craig Isom

I am pleased with the things that we in Cedar City have been able to accomplish the last 3.5 years, with my help on the City Council. I look forward to continuing my work to support our community in critical areas of development and progress by serving a final, 4-year term. There is much still to be done with respect to long-term planning and preparations with respect to each of the following:

• Search for and development of critical water resources
• Long-term plan for growth with required roads, infrastructure and land use
• Full support of police and fire initiatives and support of Cedar City staff in general
• Development of leisure resources, including the ice rink, gymnasiums, trails and soccer fields
• Govern with fiscal responsibility and recognition of taxpayer’s rights and expectations
• Broadband infrastructure and development
• Continue to make Cedar City a business and entrepreneur friendly place to operate

In all that I do with the City Council, I will stand for civility and mutual respect in our discussions and undertaking of critical City issues. Since being in office, I have tackled some tough issues, like the dog ordinance, student housing district and short-term rental regulation, and have successfully helped guide the discussions and fully explore the issues before decisions are reached. To me, leadership is listening to all sides of an argument, representing the entire city, and applying the facts (not hearsay or rhetoric) to thoroughly thought out decisions.

Thank you to each and every one of you for your votes and support over the many years. I hope that you are satisfied with the work that we have done so far, and will vote to extend my term on the City Council. If you will honor me with another term on the city council, I promise you will be happy that you did.

For an in depth discussion of impact fees – we’re in the middle of really trying to deal with those. Our impact fees are still being studied. We’re trying to decide what is the right amount. I’ve always wanted to be sure that we’re charging the right amount. We’ve got the feedback from the state that we’re in the middle of raising impact fees that cover the impact of new development, whether you love or hate it …

It’s time to start talking to one another and working in collaboration to solve the challenges that face us, including water and housing costs.

Together, we can steer this community forward in cooperation. If I will honor you with a term on the city council, I promise you will be happy that you did.
CANDIDATE SPOTLIGHT

What can Cedar City do better?

Several candidates for Cedar City Council seats appeared on the Color Country Politics Podcast for interviews. Here is a compilation of their answers to the question, “What can Cedar City do better?”

Compiled by Kelsey KEENER

IRON COUNTY TODAY

CRAIG ISOM: We can do better at putting in place a formal long-range plan. We had a plan back in 2012, but it was a plan to plan and I think we can do a better job of staying ahead of things, involving the community and looking forward.

TYLER MELLING: One of the issues that really got me wanting to run was the remodeling aspect and, it’s tied to other issues, but just finding ways to add predictability to commerce here. A predictable platform is always better than an unpredictable one so as people are shopping for a place to live -- people are consumers in every aspect including in that way -- and so if there’s a pattern of people setting up businesses and wanting to expand businesses and not having a predictable process with the city, that’s going to be advertised and be a detriment to our growth.

BARRY SHORT: One of the things that’s been talked about a lot – and I know will be talked about a whole lot more over the course of this – is jobs. The city’s done a fairly good job of initiating things along those lines but it hasn’t always done a really good job following up on them or understanding how and why they happen. We just had, in the last couple of days, the announcement of the new plastics factory, GOEX. ... Why did they choose Cedar City? At this point we don’t quite know the answer to that. And if we knew more about the answer to why (companies) like these choose Cedar City, it would actually give us a great leg up in recruiting others to come.

TJ PENROD: With some of the recent things going on, there has been some divisiveness going on in Cedar City that you’ve seen. There’s the mascot issue, it’s really divided our community and I don’t know why it’s divided it so much where people have gotten to the point where they’re not listening to each other. Both sides have arguments that are valid and necessary and it seems that there’s a lot of arguing and name calling and drudgery. I’d like to see that change; it worries me.

CHRIS DAHLIN: I’m not going to argue for improvement, I’m going to argue more that I can help; I can help with what has gone on. For example, I believe what is really needed now, I think we have sort of a near crises of available land within Cedar City limits to be able to develop into affordable housing. We’re getting our affordable housing but it’s pretty cramped; everything’s a town home and pretty soon we’re going to be dropping the two-story stuff and start going to four story. I think we need to be really attuned to that and there are ways that the city can facilitate and I’d like to see that kind of facilitation.

DON OSWALD: There are a lot of streets that are in need of repair; a lot of streets that have huge, huge potholes and I think because economy was so bad a couple of years ago, they just got behind because we didn’t have the funds to keep up. Now that the economy is rolling, we just haven’t caught up with all the work that needed to be done. That would be a good start, would be the streets. We could do something to help improve the Main Street ... we need to do something there to help restore the looks of some of the older buildings ... There’s nothing worse than to look at the Main Street as a dying part of the city; it should be still a hub part of the city, not something on the back burner.

TERRI HARTLEY: As I think about that question, I honestly think that what we can do is communicate what’s going on better. I think we maybe need a public relations person or somebody that actually gets out there and talks about what we’re doing. ... I think we’re really poor about talking about our master plan. We’re in the process of updating that, we’ve recognized, with all the people that are coming in asking for zoning requests, maybe that plan needs to be updated. We hate to do spot zoning and so this year we’re going to be taking a hard look at that. ... Another thing is our impact fees – we’re in the process of having a study done for our impact fees. Whether you love or hate it ... impact fees that cover the impact of new homes, new development, whatnot, but we always want to be sure that we’re charging the right amount.

STEPHANIE FLORES: Our rent is high, it’s actually high for state of Utah and it’s high for the nation and Utah I guess is high for the nation. It’s not just rent, though, either, it’s also the cost of houses here -- they’re too high. To buy a house here it’s above the pay grade, it’s just too high. People are unable to afford to buy a house. And our rent, I don’t know what is going on, but it is just increasing significantly in the past few years, even just the past few months. ... In addition to that we have an issue with really low wages for the cost of housing. I think if we could decrease the cost of housing and increase the low wages where we can find a balance. ... I think we can balance them both, that way not one of them is doing a big change.

BRITTANIE PARRY: Listen to the community members; be able to empathize with your community members. ... When you have people come in front of the city council, with very valid concerns about development near their home, even when you have people basically begging ‘don’t ruin my home’, ‘don’t change the quality of my life’, I would like to see the city council just (for) one moment be able to put themselves in that person’s shoes and be able to say ‘would I want to live next to this’ and really understand where they’re coming from. It almost feels like they’re immediately finger waggling at them, ‘how dare you tell someone else what they can do with their property’, without ever really taking to heart that someone’s home, that’s their life and it’s the most important thing to some people.

STEPHEN GWIN: One of the things that I learned and one of the things that I’ve obtained is to remember the street level perspective; how are things going to play out on the street level? On the average mom, dad, kids, their life here? How is it going to play out for, say, our tourists, our visitors who come to see Shakespeare? ... Our city has made some decisions that have been great, from that perspective, but in other cases I think sometimes we get caught up in this or that or we think that we’ve already got it figured out and we’re not collaborating enough with the regular citizens, with the regular families and people who are here. ... One of the other things that kind of goes along with that, I think we need a little bit more transparency in our dealings.

Sunday, July 20, 1969 was the landing of the first two astronauts onto the moon. At 8:56 p.m. Mountain Daylight Time, Neil Armstrong became the first man to set foot on the moon, and he uttered the famous words “That’s one small step for [a] man, one giant leap for mankind” as hundreds of millions around the world watched on television.

Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin, and Michael Collins were the astronauts aboard Apollo 11 that launched on July 16, 1969 from Cape Kennedy in Florida. Four days later, Armstrong and Aldrin descended to the moon in the Lunar Module while Collins remained in orbit around the moon in the Command Module that would return them to earth at the completion of the mission.

I asked a few people before the 4th of July Parade in Cedar City to relate what they remembered of that event 50 years ago.

Jim, originally from Austin, Texas, was serving in the military in Germany. He remembers Armstrong’s statement and a feeling of pride. Meanwhile, his daughter watched the event from her grandmother’s home in Ohio.

Gary watched on a black and white TV in Delta, Utah as a nine-year-old. He remembers Walter Cronkite describing the events, and a feeling of pride in America more than the specific details of the occasion.

Jeanette, then 6 years old, doesn’t remember many details, except that her dad pulled her out of bed to watch it on TV. (My cousin, about the same age, was upset that her dad didn’t let her watch it because it was past her bedtime.)

David, now from Enoch, was just out of the army as he watched it on TV.

George watched on TV in American Fork, where he was working at Goodyear Tire. He had graduated from Panguitch High School and BAC (now SUU) and had served in Korea with the National Guard. He remembers the event as “really something.”

Cletus from Enterprise remembers it was wonderful having all of the family together watching the first steps, and that it was really a big thing. Paul and Karen were a young couple in Cedar City with 3 kids, and it was really exciting watching the landing as a family.

I remember my grandmother’s brother came over to my family’s home to watch because he didn’t own a TV. He was born in the horse and buggy days, before the development of the automobile. He was amazed as the automobile, the airplane, radio, television, and other technologies that advanced over the years, but that night he repeatedly stated that he could not believe that he had lived long enough to see a man walk on the moon.

Not everything went according to plan during the lunar landing mission. On their landing approach, Armstrong and Aldrin noticed that they were passing landmarks on the moon a few seconds before they were expected to. Armstrong noticed that instead of a smooth flat area planned for landing, they were heading toward a crater with large rocks and steep slopes. He took manual control and guided the Eagle (the name for the Apollo 11 Lunar Module) to a better landing site. Information available to the crew indicated only 25 seconds of landing fuel left after their safe set down.

Upon arrival, Armstrong radioed Mission Control, “Houston, Tranquility Base here. The Eagle has landed.” Charles Duke at Mission Control responded: “Roger, Tranquility, we copy you on the ground. You got a bunch of guys about to turn blue. We’re breathing again. Thanks a lot.”

Many things are known today that were not publicly known at the time of the first manned lunar landing 50 years ago this month. Enoch Animal Shelter celebrates Grand Opening

by Kelsey KEENER

The grand opening for the new Enoch Animal Shelter took place last Wednesday evening. Enoch Mayor Geoffrey Chestnut welcomed attendees to the event and credited the fruition of this project to past city administrations.

“We’re very fortunate in that this has been a long time in coming,” he said. “Prior city councils had made the decision to start saving for this project some time ago … We’re fortunate that where we are now is due the foresight of other city councils and, frankly, the community getting behind those decisions ultimately.”

Mayor Chestnut recognized organizations and individuals who donated to the shelter: Enoch City Public Works, framing, roofing and labor; Phase Concrete, labor; Go Civil Engineering, construction plans; Dominion Energy, installation of natural gas materials; and Gail Arcularius, paintings. He also mentioned many of the businesses who participated in constructing various phases of the shelter.

Enoch Animal Control Officer Chris Johnson expressed her gratitude for the new facility and those who helped make it a reality.

“I just want to say my biggest thank you to Enoch City, to the Mayor, to City Council, to Chief (Jackson) Ames and to Rob Dotson for always supporting us and supporting our mission and what we are trying to achieve, which is a no-kill animal shelter,” she said. “Our feelings are that everybody has a chance to live, everybody’s worthy of living and we just are so thankful that we have the support.”

Johnson also thanks those who donated time and materials, saying the project would not have been possible otherwise, and guests were then invited to tour the new facility.

Some of my best friends are books, and some of my favorite summer time memories are found within their pages. You would think that one’s greatest summer vacation memories would revolve around Mickey Mouse or a houseboat or wild river rafting, but not so in my case. My favorite childhood vacation memory revolves around one single solitary book, “The Bronze Bow” by Elizabeth George Speare.

Mom read it to me and my siblings on our summer road trip to Yellowstone. I think it was the summer I turned eleven. It still remains one of my all-time favorites. My mom was a smart one. She also quarantined us kids to our room for an hour after lunch to read every day. I am sure a few of my brothers and sisters complained, but not me. I found adventures and mysteries and wonder in that one hour.

My love of literature followed me throughout my life. One of the most pivotal moments in my life occurred when I was sitting in Professor David Lee’s Children’s Lit class at SUU, when I had an “ah ha” moment—an epiphany if you will.

Up until that moment, I was declared a journalism major. The journalism class I was taking that semester was taught by some squirming looking fellow with a less than desirable personality. In contrast, David Lee was brilliant. He embodied all of the characteristics of a master teacher. I was simply mesmerized.

Children’s lit was a delight. Our major assignment that semester was to read literature for youth and then catalog and summarize them. It was so much fun. Assigned to read books...a lot of them. This was right up my alley.

The years have come and gone and I often think of that moment and the gift that David Lee gave to me. It is a gift that I have carried with me over the years.

“There is no Frigate like a Book
To take us Lands away,
Nor any Courser like a Page
Of Prancing Poetry
—This Traverse may the poorest take
Without oppress of Toll—
How fragul is the Chariot
That bears a Human soul.”
—Emily Dickinson

Today, I belong to a book group. We are a small group but we love to read. We are a group of moms but we also dabble in a few other things. Among us there is a doctor, a nurse, a copy editor, two English teachers, a culinary artist, and an administrative assistant.

The people of “Guernsey Literary and Potato Peel Pie Society” became my friends. Just as they saw each other through the occupation of German soldiers, they saw me through a rough spot too. I was so sad to see the book end as it took them from me.

This book is a gift and is definitely worth one read, but best suited for two and three. It is a story masterfully told through letters. A pilgrimage of its characters and its readers.

“I wonder how the book got to Guernsey? Perhaps there is some secret sort of homing instinct in books that brings them to their perfect readers.” Mary Ann Shaffer and Annie Barrows

I am most thankful to Julene for sharing this gem with me. The only problem is that I ask myself almost every day, “Why aren’t I in Guernsey?” Maybe Guernsey will be my road trip destination next summer.

Make new friends—read a book

A God’s eye view

PHILIPPIANS 4:7-9

What do you see when you look in the mirror? Do you see wrinkles, regrets, mistakes, memories, faith, failures, hopes, a hero? Perhaps you only see and feel the cutting shards of barrenness and brokenness and feel there is no hope for your future. Do you worry about what other people see when they look at you? Are you wondering if they are whispering behind your back? Maybe a gesture of friendship and concern was taken offensively and their gossip has finally overflowed into your awareness.

It sounds daunting and depressing doesn’t it? I will tell you a secret (which shouldn’t be a secret). It doesn’t matter what negative, abusive things you’ve heard from someone else, or have said to yourself as much as what God sees and says when He looks at you. He wants you to see (and reveal) your true beauty—inside and out. He knows this world can fill your mind with so much garbage and can hurt your heart in ways that can make you disbelieve your own worth.

And it’s hardest when the sharp shards come from family members, or from your friends. This is not uncommon, unfortunately. You hope for the best, but sometimes you have to move on. What shouldn’t be uncommon is that you start looking into God’s mirror more often. And not only looking but receiving and focusing on the good things in your life. They are there, if you learn to look with a God’s eye view.

Have you ever asked yourself what does God see when He looks at you?

Matt had a deep and abiding love for his Savior, Jesus Christ. Matt served as a bishop, both of a SUU student ward and most recently for his beloved Fiddlers Canyon Ward. He also served in two stake presidencies. He had a special love for the youth and children of the church. In all of his callings, he loved both the people he served and those with whom he served. His playful spirit endeared him to many, but he also had no problem being forthright when the occasion warranted. He is remembered by family, friends, patients, colleagues, ward and stake members, and total strangers for his kind heart, quick wit, and gentle soul, and as someone who sought to ease pain wherever he found it.

Matt and Sue were blessed with five wonderful children, of whom he was very proud. He loved spending time with his kids, golfing (mostly laughing), scuba diving, traveling, and working in his workshop. His favorite holiday was Thanksgiving when he was surrounded by family and friends.

BURNING THE MIDNIGHT OIL (PART 2)

If you have a family, ask yourself if you are taking care of them financially at the cost of nurturing them emotionally? I know you can do both, and sometimes you have to. But if you’re not taking care of your needs then you’re already starving your loved ones worse than not putting food on the table. Yes, you can have a full time job and a family but be careful to not let your family’s support go unnoticed or unreturned. Hearts are much harder to replace than occupations. And I promise you that the pay and benefits from a happy family are much better than any other “job”.

Remember that you’re greatest strength and ability to endure your schedule duels and recharge when you’re weary and worn out comes from having a purpose. It will not come from just getting more sleep, more me time, or more play time. Those things will only help you to survive.

I know sometimes you have to sacrifice the things you want to do in order to survive, but if you don’t find a greater purpose for your life, something with more meaning than a time-clock and crowded cubicle, you might wake up one day and wonder where your life and your family went.

Don’t live to work. Make a way to work so you can truly live and thrive, not just survive.

Remember that your heart, health and time are irreplaceable. Spend them wisely, or you’ll go emotionally bankrupt and be burnt out before you know it and your family will no longer be able to enjoy your time. They may even forget who you are. Listen to the right voices, make the right choices and remember that no matter how long the midnight oil has been burning, your life is worth so much more. It must be lived. If you don’t fight for your future and your life will...the time-clock.

Don’t live to work.
Make a way to work so you can truly live and thrive, not just survive.
Cedar National juniors win thriller at softball Regional

by Tom ZULEWSKI
IRON COUNTY TODAY

In the space of two short innings in its July 19 game at the Junior League softball West Regional, the Cedar National girls team felt the jolt of losing all of a five-run lead with only six outs to work with. Kenlee Clove delivered the perfect recovery tool and kept her team on course toward another shot at a World Series title. Clove lined a 3-2 pitch for a two-run single with two out in the bottom of the seventh inning as Cedar National stayed unbeaten with a 7-6 come-from-behind victory over Redmond, Wash., in Tucson, Ariz. The win kept the team unbeaten with a 2-0 record, but it was far from easy. Behind the pitching of Payton Lister, Cedar National scored two runs in the first and added three more in the second for the early 5-0 lead. Lister kept Redmond off the board through the fourth, but a run

SUU's Larsen named to preseason All-Conference, Allstate AFCA Good Works Teams

by Bryson LESTER
SUU ATHLETICS STRATEGIC COMMUNICATION

Thunderbird senior center Zach Larsen has been named to the Big Sky Preseason All-Conference team. “He’s been a tremendous leader,” SUU head coach Demario Warren said. “He’s done everything we’ve asked of him, and gone above and beyond even my expectations of who he is. He came to me right after the season and wanted to know what he could do to make sure we didn’t have another season like last year. He’s committed, and he was really concentrated on how to get his teammates to be committed as well. We’re really excited about his leadership and obviously he’s one of the best centers in the country.”

Preseason accolades have rolled in for the senior offensive lineman this summer, as he has been named a Preseason All-American by both HERO Sports and Athlon Sports.

Larsen has also been nominated for the 2019 Allstate AFCA Good Works Team for the amount of community service hours he’s completed and the impact he’s had on the community in Cedar City. “It’s truly inspiring to see these young men dedicating their time and energy outside of their already busy schedules to leave a lasting impact in their communities,” said John O’Donnell, Allstate’s Western Territory president and member of the Allstate AFCA Good Works Team selection committee. “As a longtime college football sponsor, Allstate takes great pride in our partnership with the AFCA, and we are honored to celebrate the successes of these players and highlight their stories as an inspiration to all who love the sport.”

The announcement of the final 22-man team will come on September 12, 2019. “For 12 straight years, the AFCA has been proud to partner with Allstate to honor football student-athletes who volunteer their time and energy to give back to their local communities and other countries around the world,” AFCA Executive Director Todd Berry said. “These 137 nominees are examples to not only their fellow student-athletes, but to everyone in this great nation that selfless acts of giving back will enrich the lives of people they know, and don’t know, who benefit from their generosity.”

The Thunderbirds will open their season on August 31 in Las Vegas against the UNLV Rebels. Keep tabs on the Thunderbirds throughout the entire Big Sky Kickoff by following @SUUFB on Twitter and Instagram and by liking the Southern Utah Football page on Facebook.

Special All-Star year for North Side

The Utah All-Star Little League baseball and softball tournaments had a full plate of excitement on both ends of town – at Lions Park and Fields on the Hill – but the end results produced a surprising statistic not seen in this area for a long time, if at all.

Cedar National not only snared three of the crowns that earned West Regional berths – both softball teams and Junior League baseball – but the Little League baseball bunch nearly made it a clean sweep, coming one walk-off hit short.

As of this writing, the Junior League softball team led by head coach Aaron Wheelwright is one win away from playing for the title in Tucson, Ariz., and a second trip to a World Series. The only mystery is if they’ll need one win or two to get there, and the details from the week can be found elsewhere on these pages.

For the third year in a row, the Majors softball team has returned to San Bernardino, Calif., and is looking for a second trip to Portland, Ore., for the World Series. With a new group of players in the mix, any rumors of a drop-in effort were largely unfounded.

And to complete the trifecta, the Junior Baseball team won its All-Star tournament and will be playing in the West Regional at San Jose, Calif., starting Friday.

While there are many reasons to smile and celebrate success all over the North Side, parts of the All-Star tournament left me more than a little curious about the preparation that went on behind the scenes.

One instance came when a softball game had to be stopped while it was in progress so the field could be watered. It took that long for someone in the know to come out and do the work, which delayed the proceedings for about 10 minutes while the fans had to step away unless they didn’t have an issue with getting wet.

A second development happened when the Majors championship game was delayed at the start because the field wasn’t ready. Parent volunteers from both teams had to set the chalk lines themselves, causing a 15-minute delay from the scheduled 1 p.m. first pitch.

It may be a simple case of barking up the wrong tree, but the tournament has been a part of this city’s summertime fun for the last 30 years. A quality event like this deserves a set of quality fields to play on, and they should be ready on time.

On the minor-league front, Canyon View alum Mitch Talbot is still doing his thing on the mound for the Columbus Clippers, top minor-league affiliate of the Cleveland Indians. The right-handed pitcher is in his 18th season in baseball and he’s played all over the world, from South Korea to Cleveland, Sugar Land (Texas) to Columbus, and 13 different minor-league teams in between.

But rumors are floating around that Talbot may be in his final season as he looks for one more chance to pitch in front of a big-league crowd.

Talbot will turn 36 years old in October and he just made his 200th minor-league start July 19 against the Buffalo Bisons. Through that start, his pitching line shows promise, even if the ERA is at 6.52 with a 2-2 record.

Talbot has struck out 27 batters and walked only seven in 38 2/3 innings over eight appearances with the Clippers since June 6. The Indians have some issues with their pitching depth, especially after Carlos Carrasco was diagnosed with leukemia in June, so Talbot’s dream still has a solid foundation worth building on.

In the never-ending battle with time, the power of a good fastball still makes a lot of difference.

SUU's Johnson named to NABC Honors Court for second time

By Bryson Lester

SUU Athletics Strategic Communication

CEDAR CITY — For the second-consecutive year, former Southern Utah men’s basketball player Matthew Johnson has been named to the 2019-20 NABC (National Association of Basketball Coaches) Honors Court.

This recognizes those men’s collegiate basketball student-athletes who excel in academics during the past season. The NABC Honors Court recognizes the talents and gifts that these men possess off the court and the hard work they exhibit in the classroom.

On the court, Johnson logged 28 minutes for the Thunderbirds across 13 games.

In order to be named to the Honors Court, a student-athlete must meet a high standard of academic criteria. The qualifications are as follows:

1. Academically a junior or senior and a varsity player.
2. Cumulative grade point average (GPA) of 3.2 or higher at the conclusion of the 2018-19 academic year.
3. Students must have matriculated at least one year at their current institution.
4. Member of a NCAA Division I, II, III, or NAIA Division I or II institution with a NABC member coach.

in the fifth started the rally wave in motion.

By the time it was finished, five runs crossed the plate in the sixth and Redmond had the lead. Even though Cedar National went quietly in its half of the inning, Lister kept the Washington team from adding on in the seventh to give her team a chance.

It was a chance they took full advantage of despite being down to a final strike on several occasions in the inning.

The stressful second game was a direct opposite of the opener, where Cedar National cruised to a 21-5 victory over a team from Martinez, Calif., in six innings.

Kenlee Clove had five of CN’s 21 hits while Lister added four and Michaela Whitehair had three.

Cedar National scored eight runs in the sixth to finish the victory early. They continued in the regional Monday with a game against Four Peaks Little League of Arizona and will secure a shot at the championship tonight with one more victory.

The Cedar National majors softball team split its first two games of the Little League West Regional in San Bernardino, Calif. They easily beat Wyoming, 14-0 in four innings July 20 behind a no-hitter from Elli John and a seven-run second inning.

Taylor James and Gracie Burt had two hits each in the victory.

The script was played in reverse one day later as Jennalyn Sniffen threw a full six-inning no-hitter as Hawaii shut down Cedar National, 7-0. Hawaii scored three runs in the fourth and two more in the fifth to put the game away.

Cedar National won an elimination game against Idaho on Monday, 10-0 in four innings. The West Regional continues through the championship game Friday.
